J-1 Waiver Based on Exceptional Hardship Upon a U.S. Citizen Child

J-1 Waiver Based on Exceptional Hardship Upon a U.S. Citizen Child ^[1]

Submitted by Chief Editor on Apr 24th 2013

We filed an application seeking a waiver of the foreign residence requirement for our client based on exceptional hardship upon the client's U.S. citizen child. We argued that the minor child would suffer extreme hardship if he were forced to leave the U.S. with his mother to fulfill the two-year home residency requirement because of a serious medical condition, for which treatment was not readily available in the applicant's home country. We provided ample supporting documentation in this regard.

USCIS granted the waiver.
